Continuation Sheet (PTO-303)

Application No.

Continuation of 11.

Applicant argues in substance that "The PRBT system of the Choe reference determines whether the calling party is a service subscriber. If the called party is a subscriber, the system provides a ringback message, edited by the called party, to the calling party (para [0028]). So both parties are subscribers to the service" Applicant further argues that in the present invention "A demand for multimedia information is included in subscriber data that is retrieved by the core network node. The demand is executed and multimedia information associated with the called party (or calling party) is then sent to the calling party terminal (various summany paragraphs, e.g., para. [0016]). As disclosed in the present invention, the "demand" limitation is part of the subscriber data (para. [0016]). The core network node reads the subscriber data and reacts to the demand by providing an address of the multimedia data associated with that called party that can be retrieved by terminals."

Examiner respectfully disagrees with the Applicants arguments. In Par. 0028-0029 of the Choe reference, Choe explicitly teaches when a calling party calls a called party the system determines if the called party is a service subscriber and if the called party is a service subscriber then the PRBT system accesses the Internet Data Center to retrieve the message settings based on the called subscriber's account information and provides the personalized ring back message to the calling party because the demand to provide a personalized ring back message is in the message settings of the called subscriber's account information. Further Applicant suggests that Par. 0028 of the Choe reference teaches that "both parties are subscribers to the service" but Examiner disagrees as Par. 0028 explicitly states that the called party may or may not be a service subscriber and it does not mention the calling party being a subscriber.
